

A Christmas Poem

by Alyssa Noel

As I lay there, and before I go to bed, a thousand thoughts run through my head.

God is the first, and will always be.
He's the one who loves you and me.

Christmas is the time, to laugh, have fun and enjoy the moments with the people you love, but who do we have to thank for all this? God of course, the one who's above.
He's watching over you.

Every breathe you're taking; it's only because of him.
But why do we go out and sin?

He shed his blood, and took the pain.
But why do some take his name in vain?

Its days like these, I thank God for the people all around me.
The sun shines because of him.

Look in the mirror as you wake on Christmas morning, and then give God the thanks.

He's the only reason why you're alive at the moment in time, in his hands, is your life line.
As you sit under the tree, with your family, look up and say
"Dear God, I'm glad you chose me".

He put Christ in Christmas, so why must we take that out? Jesus is the one, it's all about.
Don't forget these words I say, before you go to bed, kneel and pray.
God is the one, the one above us all, he made summer, spring, winter, and fall.
So, don't fear because where ever you are, God is near.

He hears you and your every cry; he will always be by your side.
God has a love that's unconditional, for every one of us, but it's your decision to take it or leave it to dust.

It's that moment, when you're in bad times.
God is the one you need to find.
So, open up your ears, take what I have to say to heart.
Because, Gods life is the life you should be apart.

Inside my heart, way deep down to every vessel.
There is a love, a love unconditional, for him.
I wish everyone could feel how I do, cause there is a God, and he is real.

So, listen to me, before you go on with your day, take this moment and ask for God into your heart, because that is the only way you'll never fall apart.
